

THOMAS F. PATTERSON, MD, FACP, FIDSA

Chief, Division of Infectious Diseases

Professor of Medicine

Director, San Antonio Center for Medical Mycology

The University of Texas Health Science Center at San Antonio

San Antonio, TX

Dr. Thomas F. Patterson is Professor of Medicine in the Division of Infectious Diseases at the University of Texas Health Science Center in San Antonio, Texas, where he is also the Director of the San Antonio Center for Medical Mycology, Director for the Infectious Diseases Fellowship program, and Division Head and Division Chief, Infectious Diseases.

Dr. Patterson received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Baylor University followed by his medical degree from the University of Texas. Subsequently, he completed a medicine residency at Vanderbilt University and Yale-New Haven Hospital. He was then a post-doctoral fellow in infectious diseases at Yale University School of Medicine.

Dr. Patterson is a member of numerous professional committees and societies, including the Infectious Diseases Society of America, American Society for Microbiology, and International Society for Human and Animal Mycoses . He serves as a reviewer for several professional journals such as the Journal of Clinical Microbiology and Annals of Internal Medicine. In addition, he currently holds several editorial positions, including being Co-Editor-in-Chief of www.doctorfungus.org. His research has appeared in journals such as Clinical Infectious Diseases, Journal of Clinical Microbiology, and Antimicrobial Agents and Chemotherapy. He has been published in print and audio formats and has been invited across the globe to speak as a guest lecturer.